The Murder of the two Princes in the Tower.— 26

Death of Gen.l Wolf.

Bravery, military skill, and a fortunate concurrence of circumstances, were seldom more forcibly displayed than at the siege of Quebec, under the command of General Wolfe, who, though young in years, showed the conduct of an old experienced general. This promising hero was killed by a cannon ball, just in the moment of victory. After the fatal shot had entered his breast, he leaned on the shoulder of an officer, who, seeing the
